When you arrived, the charge nurse (unit) was expecting you, greeted you cordially, and assigned you to a preceptor.
The preceptor gave you a brief orientation to the unit, showing you where to find necessary items, describing patient flow patterns, defining responsibilities of patient care personnel, and provided you a place to store personal belongings.
The preceptor served as an effective resource to answer questions.
The preceptor encouraged pt contacts, served as an effective learning coach during patient assessments and directly observed while invasive skills or drug administration were performed.
The preceptor/unit personnel made you feel welcome.
Physicians encouraged your presence during patient examinations/interventions (surgical procedures) and used the opportunity to reinforce your knowledge through bedside teaching.
Observed patient care was consistent with the standards presented during the course and helped you to apply didactic theory to actual practice situations.
